SUMMER SEASON ON AT BELASCO THEATER

worth's Experiment."

Odette Tyler and an excellent supporting company opened the summer season at the Belasco Theater last evening with R. C. Carton's three-act comedy, "Lady Huntworth's Experiment." Miss Tyler was received with flattering enthusiasm, her opening night being marked by an assemblage of unusual social prominence, a packed house, and the bestowal upon her of many flowers at the close of the first and second acts.

"Lady Huntworth's Experiment" deals with English life and tells a story of a woman who, having been divorced from a worthless and dissolute husband, seeks employment as a cook in an out-of-theway country vicarage. There, although the cook, she turns the heads of every nan in the household, being proposed to by them all, including-Gandy, the butler. This is the opportunity for the co of the piece, while the heart interest and pathos come as a result of the discovery of Lady Huntworth's personality and history and the appearance of her divorced husband. All ends happily when she finds that she has been left enough money to support her for the remainder of her life.

Miss Tyler, as the "lady cook," did charming work, making that rather prosaic calling most attractive. She made the most of all the comedy situations and did full justice to the serious scenes. Her personality is peculiarly adapted to the part, and to this advantage she added all the resource of her art.

In the supporting company the work of Fuller Mellish, as Gandy. Wilson Meirose, as Captain Dorvaston, the lover, and Priestiy Morrison, as the Rev. Audley Pillenger, the vicar of Stillford, stood out as being worthy of especial comment, Guy Coombs 'unpersonation of the dissolute hisband was excellent, Mr. Coombs succeeding in creating interest in what, under normal circumstances, would have been an unimportant role.

Miss Inez Plummer's work as the ingenue, Lucy Pillenger, was up to the full mark of what an ingenue is thought to be like. Blanche Stoddard, as Keziah, the housemaid, and Mrs. West, as the vicar's sister, were good.
